Christmas break is almost here! The end of the semester is coming and that means finals. Students are both excited for their vacation and focused for their upcoming tests. I do not see anyone stressed out about making grades, though, and that means they must be well prepared and well learned.

An extraordinary amount of fundraising has been done these past few weeks. There have been numerous dances, a few gift-wrapping booths, a coat check for city parties, and even a Ford truck raffle. The generosity of people and businesses in donating food, money, and time is always amazing.

Basketball season started December 1st and, as usual, the athletes were very excited to be on the court again. The wrestlers had a great season, sending Jesse Kueber, and Chris Hawthorne to the state championships.

Students are concern-free this holiday season, and seem to have their minds mainly on what they will do with all their extra time. There have been no complaints issued to me, and when asked students have a hard time coming up with any. The student's biggest concern is that the school year is already half way gone, and how astonishing and sad that is.
