

Student Representative Report
January 15, 2004

A new semester has begun, and students are gearing up for the rest of the year. This is a time of low stress and re-association with school, after the long break, for most students. Many students have been rearranging their schedules for one reason or another, most only hoping to complete their credits, and others are taking advantage of class opportunities only available for the second semester.

The seniors have been preoccupied, and some still are, with college applications and scholarships. Everyone is anticipating the end of the year and what it will bring.

The girls' basketball team is scheduled to travel to King Cove next weekend. They have high hopes for victory, but are also quite wary of King Cove's questionable reffing. The boys' basketball team is scheduled to play at home against Sand Point next weekend as well.

The Russian club and the art club are planning multi-course dinners in hopes of raising money to finance their trips this summer. The dinners are scheduled for the end of this month and the beginning of February.

The high school qualifying exam is coming up again. Many students, who've passed, are excited to sleep in for a few mornings. Others are looking to take the test just one last time and be done with it. Studying helps, as they know, and hopefully they will take advantage of the studying sessions the school arranges for them.
