Student Representative Report

March 2005

Recently, students seem to want two things. The first being more classes. The second being technology upgrades.

There have been two separate students to ask for more classes. One student wanted a Study Hall. When I was in 8th grade, the Junior High had a fifteen-minute Study Hall after lunch where they could do homework. After that, they went to their last three classes. Another student has asked for another language class. The class that the student asked for was French class. Currently, Mrs. Roraback teaches Spanish, Russian, and German; those three classes are the only language classes we have, unless you consider English a class. I am not sure how this class could become available, but it would be convenient if a new teacher was hired for another academic position and was able to teach French during their schedule.

On this year's Budget Committee Wish List, one of the things was technology upgrades. The students occasionally have access to the CAD Lab that has the new Dell computers.

Unfortunately, this access isn't always available. In the After School program, we are allowed to use the computer. The computers work, but they are extremely slow. The computers in the library are Microns, and any student will tell you that they are probably some of the slowest operating computers. There is only one thing that can fix these computers and that is patience. With the students today, patience is in short supply. I have already told the student who mentioned that we need new computers in the library that technology upgrades is on the Budget Committee's Wish List. I also told them that it looks like we probably won't get new computers too soon. This student is a senior this year, and I mentioned that it wouldn't affect him too much.
