

Student Representative Report
Robyn Burt
October 2006

We have just made it through the first quarter of school. Grades are coming out and students, surprisingly enough, aren't in a panic. Everything is on the up and up, and there aren't many problems to report.

So far I have been approached with one suggestion and one complaint. The suggestion I was given came from a student suggesting that we should have a student court where the principal would act as the judge, the National Honor Society members would act as the active members of the jury and students could choose their own representative. The purpose of this court was unclear and possibly the student suggesting could go into greater detail of what the court would be used for, but it was a suggestion made by a student and my job is to give it to the school board.

The complaint that I was given came from a parent of a student who is taking on a correspondence course. Her complaint was actually a question. Her question was "How come the school doesn't help students pay for their correspondence courses, but can fund all the sports trips and student government trips?" At the time I couldn't provide an answer to this person, but I later found out that there is funding available on a limited basis and that most correspondence courses are taken by students needing to get credit for a course already offered by the Unalaska City School District, but they failed to pass the class.

Other than that these comments mentioned, I wasn't approached with anything else. I believe that this school year will go great and look forward to more great suggestions and input from my fellow classmates.
